Big Rush at Postoffice.

Of course today is a general holiday. Some of the stores will have delayed delywries and many grocery stores will remain open until noon. With the exception of the busy doctors and newspaper men, who never rest, the street car men, and who never rest, the street car men, and a few others in the public service, nobedy will be working. This does not apply to the men working for Uncle Sam at the postoffice. These have been working all sorts of Sours for the past week hindling what Postmaster A. L. behind the scenes after last night's performance.

Among theatrical people away from home, Christmas day is always looked forward to with gloom. Possessed of all the human attributes of the ordinary person, stage folk find themselves on Christmas day strangers in a strange land, with nothing but a pang of lonesomeness to remind them of the Yuletide season.

Last evening's gathering provided a welcome relaxation for the performers of this week's bill at the Orpheum, refreshments and artistic entertainment adding to the enjoyment. Mack and Marcus, who will break into the business the coming week, opened the program and improvised a clever act for the diversion of the company. Willard Weihe contributed some exquisite violin numbers, and other features rounded out an attractive program.
